It is difficult to say when the earliest portions of the Vedas came into existence, but it seems clear they are among the very earliest written wisdom documents produced humans. And, at our sacrifices, these, sons, singers, have enlarged their bounds, So that the cows must walk knee-deep.

For Indra, he is Sakra, he shall aid us while he gives us wealth. Whenever mortal worshipper will sing a bounteous giver's praise, Let him with song inspired laud Varuna who supports the folk who follow varied rites. For thee this Soma hath been pressed, in whose wild joy thou madest once Sambara Divodasa's prey: O Indra, drink!

Run forth to battle, conquering the Vritras; thou speedest to quell the foes! language used is also archaic and this makes it even more difficult to understand and appreciate. Adi Shankara, for instance, referred to Chandogya Upanishad times in his Vedanta Sutra Bhasya, more than whatever other old content.
